

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has been a tremendous success and should be a model for other states and/or the federal government to follow. Before the law was enacted, I received 6-12 calls a week from telemarketers for all manner of unwanted products and services. After my name went on the list, calls all but completely stopped. It has improved domestic tranquility as my family no longer plays pass-the-phone in an effort to avoid getting stuck in a one-way conversation with someone trying to sell us something we didn't ask for.